from our executive director

Susan Tamulevich

Two-thousand-eighteen marks the New London Maritime Society's 35th anniversary and the 20th year of the Frank L. McGuire Maritime Research Library. I arrived in March, 2008, just as the economic downturn was becoming a reality, and times were tough. But one could see that the Custom House was a true 'Sleeping Beauty' only needing some loving attention to warm back to life.

It was the late Ellery Thompson's loyal friend, Marion Krepcio, left, who recommended me to NLMS. Marion was back giving a talk at the Custom House in February when she surprised us all by donating a set of US Custom's papers which had been saved by Ellery back in the 1980s, when the NL custom house shut down. On his deathbed Marion promised to have them preserved. She now has.

As director, I've tried to make the Custom House a welcoming community center and it's heartening to see we've earned your trust. This year already has brought some important gifts. In this newsletter librarian Brian Rogers reports on a donation made in honor of charter trustee and super baker Vincentia Belbruno. The lifesaving painting at left and an 1845 Frances' Patent Metallic Surfboat ship model, given anonymously, now fill out our lifeboat display. In February, Charles B. Moss, Jr., did something truly transformative when he donated a collection of 22 Victorian 'woolies' -- embroidery 'paintings' stitched by sailors at sea. These charming pieces are a perfect complement to the museum collection. See for yourself in March, when the new 'woolies' go on view.

Across ten years, NLMS has taken ownership of three magnificent lighthouses and worked to popularize these historic sites, sparking a host of related waterfront activities. Eight years ago with teacher Jody Barthel we started Lighthouse Kids in the NL Public Schools which is still going strong as our year-long Third-Grade Local-History Program; seven years ago we pioneered lighthouse boat tours and public visits inside Harbor Light. In 2017 we held the first ever public tours inside Race Rock. With amazing community support, five years ago we all restored LIS's oldest and tallest lighthouse. NLMS organized two LIS lighthouse symposiums. With help from UCONN, the Custom House became the first NPS Network to Freedom site in CT; NLMS brought an Amistad exhibition to NYC's United Nations. We cleared the museum's flooded sub-basement following Super Storm Sandy, created both a kitchen and a terrific MUSEUM SHOP, and there's a new blue tent! Now we're working towards restoring the 1833 Custom House roof, which has leaked 'in buckets' since 1836. Thanks to trustee John Steffian and in honor of his mother, Sara, we will install a WWII-era periscope. Mark Shasha, Ruth Sussler, Denny Moers, Day photojournalists and Albert Sussler have all had exhibitions, while programs highlighted local seafood farmers and chefs, a One Big Table dinner of community recipes with Molly O'Neil, tugboats, music with Eileen Ivers and Peter Yarrow, Nimble Arts Circus, and in 2017 a new Maritime Market at SailFest -- it has been a very full ten years. All this activity is due to the support of a determined board of trustees and community of faithful volunteers, with an occasional boost by USCG cadets.

Watch for surprises to come in the anniversary year ahead. And thank you all. ■

from our board president

Ed Cubanski, III, CAPT, USCG (retired)

Warmest greetings to all of you.

I hope all of you are surviving this typical New England winter where you never know if it will snow, rain, have freezing rain fall from the sky, or find the robins arrive early. One constant in the changing New England weather is that your board has been as busy as mother nature having meetings throughout the winter. We are always thinking of ways to improve our offerings in the museum, create new revenue streams to improve our balance sheet, and become a more vibrant presence along the New England historic tourism trail.

We have lighthouses and artifacts from the 18th Century that are both local, regional, and national historic treasures. We are embarking on correcting roof and gutter projects on the Customs House to keep the water outside the building. We received a generous gift that will soon bring a working periscope to the Customs House for all to use and view scenic Long Island Sound area – maybe you'll be able to see all three of our lighthouses through those optics! Additionally, we are moving various items around inside the museum to provide better access and display of our wonderful archive of treasures

How do we do all of the above amazing things? Four ways: volunteer hours, NLMS memberships, gifts to our annual fund, and application for grants. Each are in great need for the NLMS Society to further our past successes into the future. So please renew your membership, donate to our annual fund, volunteer your time, and spread the great word about the wealth of treasures we have for your friends, family, and coworkers to enjoy! We hope to see you at the Custom House soon! ■

NLMS is very proud to receive Charles 'Ben' Moss, Jr.'s collection of Victorian woolies. Ben is the great-grandson of the legendary vaudeville impresario, B.S. Moss, and the grandson of Charles B. Moss, Sr., a radio and television producer and movie theater owner, who together built a family enterprise that made the Moss name synonymous with show business in New York. The 'woolie' collection was assembled by Ben's grandparents, who purchased the pictures on visits to London in the early 1900s.

■ Illustrated Talk: Patrick Lynch talk & book signing - Connecticut Coast & Long Island Sound: 20,000 Years of Change on Connecticut's Shores, Sunday, March 11 at 2 PM. Connecticut has some of New England's most beautiful coastal environments, but our shores and marine environments also face increasing challenges from urbanization, pollution, and climate change. This talk will look at the geology and biology of our coast, and try to place our current challenges within the context of 20,000 years of major changes in our shoreline since it was formed at the end of the Ice Age. Patrick Lynch, illustrator, photographer, and author of A Field Guide to Long Island Sound, Yale University Press, 2017, will speak about LIS and sign copies of his new LIS field guide. $12, $10 NLMS members, $8 youth ages 10 to 18. Please register online at brownpapertickets.com/event/3319869.

■ Jibboom Club - Tuesday, March 20, 2 PM, Sandy and Sidney Van Zandt will give a talk, and show pictures, about the inspiration, design, construction and sailing of their 39 foot steel cutter Sequel from 1982 — 2005. They did four transatlantic crossings and a Circumnavigation and quite a few "side" voyages while sailing 95,000 nm. FREE.

■ Jibboom Club - Tuesday, April 17, 2 PM, Join Rob and Russ for a speaker's program, good conversation and coffee. Program TBD. FREE.

Nine years ago, we hired architect Jose Guzman to do a water-penetration study of the Custom House, whose roof has leaked since 1836. Jose Guzman suggested a 10-year fix -- a rubberized coating -- which we made. But now it's time to do the real repair. We secured three grants -- two CDBG and one from the CT Trust -- and in December, 2017, president Ed Cubanski and Jose Guzman, above left, signed a contract for Jose to create the plan to restore the Custom House roof and bring its design back to the Robert Mills 1833 original. In October, masons Harold and Thailer Hefel, above right, completed a wall opening to create safe access to Harbor Lighthouse.

Important Gift for McGuire Library. The largest gift on a single subject ever to come our way are 67 whaling books recently donated by John Belbruno in honor of his aunt, Vincentia (Vinnie) Belbruno, a loyal member of the Society from its earliest days. Our modest holdings on whaling are much enriched, as befits a library in the Custom House that was built in the bustling center of the city's whaling industry. A little gem is Joseph Faulkner's "Eighteen Months on a Greenland Whaler" (1878), while the eight large volumes of "American Activities in the Central Pacific 1790-1870" (1966) fill a single shelf. No sooner were these books on the premises than Mr. Belbruno brought 53 more volumes on a range of topics from lightships to the merchant marine, all welcome additions to our collection.

Online Exhibits: A New Kind of Outreach. We invite readers to visit the digital exhibits and documentaries drawn from our collections and now available in the "Library" section of the NLMS website. The first one presents 285 historic postcards arranged in categories (Lighthouses, Steamboats and Wharves, Ocean Beach, etc.) In late December a documentary on the maritime life of William D. Alexander went public. The career of this Groton native began as fireman aboard the steam ferries linking New London and Groton before there was a road bridge. The photos and documents were provided by Iva Alexander Arpin of Norwich, and the exhibit is dedicated to all who, like Mr. Alexander, served in the merchant marine or navy in the First World War. Next to come are exhibits on the Maritime Service Officers School at Fort Trumbull (1939-1946) and the S.S. Tasco salvage vessel of the T. A. Scott Co., with several more to follow. ■
